What cookies do

Cookies are small files stored by a website on your device. Pixels, tags, local storage, and similar technologies may also recognize a browser, measure interactions, or communicate with a provider.

Technology categories

Essential technologies support security, website delivery, requested functions, and storage of privacy preferences. They remain active when needed to provide the website.

Optional analytics tools help measure visits, content use, and performance. Google Analytics and HubSpot are relevant providers. Optional advertising and social-media tools, including LinkedIn, can measure campaigns and associate website activity with advertising audiences. Embedded video and hosted forms may also communicate with their providers, including Vimeo and HubSpot.

The cookie preference panel identifies the technologies actually enabled on the website, their providers, purposes, and lifetimes. A session cookie expires when the browsing session ends; a persistent cookie remains for its configured lifetime unless removed earlier.

Making and changing a choice

Optional analytics, advertising, and optional media remain off until you choose to enable the relevant category. The banner provides Accept All, Reject Optional, and Manage Preferences. Closing or ignoring the banner does not enable optional categories. Essential functions and contact requests remain available without advertising consent.

You may change or withdraw your choice through Manage Cookie Preferences in the footer. Your Privacy Choices provides an opt-out of sale, sharing, and targeted advertising. Global Privacy Control and other legally required opt-out signals are respected. An opt-out signal takes precedence over a conflicting advertising preference.

Your choice is specific to the browser or device. Blocking or deleting cookies in your browser may require you to make the choice again and may affect some features. A cookie choice does not unsubscribe you from email; use the unsubscribe link in the email.
